SOPHIE WARD

Illustrator, Sophie Ward, has a unique take on life that overpowers her work. Full of dry humour and bubblegum aesthetics, Ward's illustrations at once take traditional femininity and existential anxiety felt by women today and revere them in her own systematically confronting and comforting style.

"Looking at a picture that I love makes me happy. It would be half the battle won if I could make people happy when they look at one of my pictures."

OSHE POP!

Stu Watkin, also known as OSHE POP!, presents works in which colourful, architectural forms of real life are simplified and colour palettes are turned on their head. Peripheral elements are removed, leaving the viewer to enjoy visions of form without distraction. He is influenced by the three-dimensional, tactile, graphic wonder that is Lego, painting cart horses (by numbers) and a love of poster art.

ROSI FEIST

"I could find inspiration for my next motif in a garden chair or a rubbish bin... the result is a collection of minimalist pop art which reflects a nostalgic banality of everyday life."

ROSI FEIST

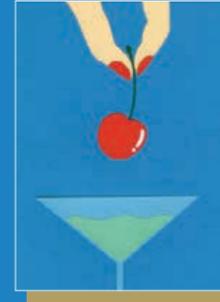

Thomas Mueller, also known as Rosi Feist, creates a collection of minimalist pop art which reflects the nostalgic banality of everyday life. He loves the trivial and finds his inspiration from everywhere, creating simple paper cut-out collages that catch the eye with their bold colour palettes.

ASHLEY PERCIVAL

Illustrator Ashley Percival creates uncanny illustrative drawings that play with proportion and characteristics. The animals he draws have personality to them, wearing playful clothes and displaying flippant attitudes. Percival's work is always bright in colour and doesn't take itself too seriously.
